Horror Film Game – instructions and teaching notes

In this game for 3-6 players, students compete to make the scariest film title, or to sabotage other people’s film titles. It is a light hearted and fun game. Students will work on their vocabulary using a card game that allows them to experiment with word order and effective word choice. Students have to put the words into a sensible order, even if the subject of their film is far from sensible. The film titles created can also become writing prompts. It makes a good session starter.

You will need: cards (pages 1-10), laminated and cut out. Coins or tokens (below).

Rules

- You are trying to make the name of a really scary horror film
- Each player is dealt five cards per round.
- Players take it in turns to put down a card. They can
  1. Try to make the scariest film title (for most points) by putting a card in front of themselves
  - or
  2. Try to sabotage someone else’s film by putting down something not at all scary in front of them (losing them points).
- When you are ready, you can finish your film. This will stop anyone adding any negative words, but means you can’t add any more. Finish your film by putting a token on the last card.
- A finished film must have at least a monster and a description (e.g. Scary Robot, Ninja Squirrel), but can have more.
- When all players have finished at least one film, the round ends.
- You can keep one film going into the next round, as long as you finish one.
- You need a Co-star to add another monster
- If you have a Co-star in your film, you must have an extra monster for each Co-star (eg Vampire and Werewolf; Bear and Tiger vs Alien)
- You can add the word “the” at any point so it makes sense.
- The winner is the first person to make 20,000 points
