Muhammad Ali (1942 – 2016)

Boxing’s most celebrated athlete, heavyweight champion Muhammad Ali was also known for his public stance against the Vietnam War and his lengthy battle with Parkinson’s disease.

Synopsis

Early Life

Boxer, philanthropist and social activist Muhammad Ali was born Cassius Marcellus Clay Jr. on January 17, 1942, in Louisville, Kentucky. Ali showed at an early age that he wasn't afraid of any one – inside or outside of the ring.

At the age of 12, Ali discovered his talent for boxing. His bike was stolen, and Ali told a police officer, Joe Martin, that he wanted to beat up the thief. "Well, you better learn how to fight before you start challenging people," Martin told him. In addition to being a police officer, Martin also trained young boxers at a local gym.

In his first amateur bout in 1954, Ali won the fight by split decision. He went on to win the 1956 Golden Gloves tournament for novices in the light heavyweight class. Three years later, he won the National Golden Gloves Tournament of Champions, and the Amateur Athletic Union’s national title for light heavyweights.

Olympic Gold

In 1960, Ali won a spot on the U.S. Olympic boxing team, and travelled to Rome, Italy, to compete. He was well known for his lightning speed and fancy footwork. Ali defeated Zbigniew Pietrzkowski from Poland to win the light heavyweight gold medal.

After his Olympic victory, Ali became an American hero. He soon turned professional, and continued to overwhelm all his opponents. Ali took out British heavyweight champion Henry Cooper in 1963, and then knocked out Sonny Liston in 1964 to become the heavyweight champion of the world.

Often referring to himself as "The greatest," Ali was not afraid to sing his own praises. In one of his famously quoted descriptions, Ali told reporters that he could "Float like a butterfly, sting like a bee" in the boxing ring.

Conversion to Islam and Suspension

In 1964, Ali decided to join the black Muslim group the Nation of Islam. At first, he called himself "Cassius X" before settling on the name Muhammad Ali. (He eventually converted to orthodox Islam during the 1970s.)

Ali spoke out against the Vietnam War. Drafted into the military in April 1967, he refused to serve. He said his religious beliefs prevented him from fighting. He was arrested, and then stripped of his world title and boxing licence. Ali was sentenced to five years in prison in June 1967 but remained free whilst he appealed his conviction. The U.S. Supreme Court eventually overturned the conviction in June 1971.

Boxing Comeback
In 1971, Ali took on Joe Frazier in what has been called the "Fight of the Century". Frazier and Ali went toe-to-toe for 14 rounds before Frazier dropped Ali with a vicious left hook in the 15th. Ali recovered quickly, but the decision went to Frazier and Ali had his first professional loss after 31 wins. Ali soon suffered a second loss, to Ken Norton, but he beat Frazier in a 1974 rematch. After losing his title to Leon Spinks in February 1978, Ali defeated him in a September rematch, becoming the first boxer to win the heavyweight championship three times. Following one final loss in 1981, to Trevor Berbick, the boxing great retired from the sport.

Philanthropy and Diagnosis of Parkinson's
In his retirement, Ali devoted much of his time to philanthropy. He announced that he had Parkinson's disease in 1984, and was involved in raising funds for the Muhammad Ali Parkinson Center in Phoenix, Arizona. Over the years, Ali also supported the Special Olympics and the Make-A-Wish Foundation, among other organisations. In 1996, he lit the Olympic cauldron at the Summer Olympic Games in Atlanta, an emotional moment in sports history.

Ali travelled to numerous countries, including Mexico and Morocco, to help those in need. In 1998, he was chosen to be a United Nations Messenger of Peace because of his work in developing nations.

In 2005, Ali received the Presidential Medal of Freedom from President George W. Bush. He also opened the Muhammad Ali Center in his hometown of Louisville, Kentucky, that same year. "I am an ordinary man who worked hard to develop the talent I was given," he said. "Many fans wanted to build a museum to acknowledge my achievements. I wanted more than a building to house my memorabilia. I wanted a place that would inspire people to be the best that they could be at whatever they chose to do, and to encourage them to be respectful of one another."

Despite the progression of Parkinson's and the onset of stenosis, a painful condition affecting the spine, Ali remained active in public life. He was on hand to celebrate the inauguration of the first African-American president in January 2009, when Barack Obama was sworn into office. Soon after the inauguration, Ali received the President's Award from the NAACP for his public service efforts.

Death and Legacy
In early 2015, Ali was hospitalised for a severe urinary tract infection after having battled pneumonia. He was hospitalised again in early June 2016 for what was reportedly a respiratory issue. The revered athlete passed away on the evening of June 3, 2016, at a Phoenix, Arizona facility.

Ali is survived by his fourth wife, Yolanda, whom he had been married to since 1986. The couple had one son, Asaad. Ali had several children from previous relationships, including daughter Laila Ali, who followed in his footsteps by becoming a champion boxer.

Universally regarded as one of the greatest boxers in history, Ali's stature as a legend continued to grow even as his physical state diminished. He continues to be celebrated not only for his remarkable athletic skills but for his courage and willingness to speak his mind.
